

05 invitation

may-june 2026

my second midterm board

It doesn't have to be linear.
It can happen in different places at the same time.
There is no need to design a fixed journey.

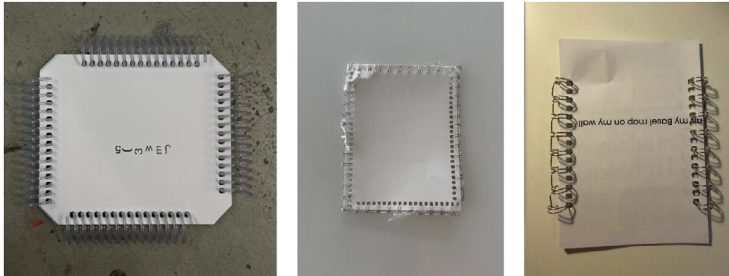

introduction

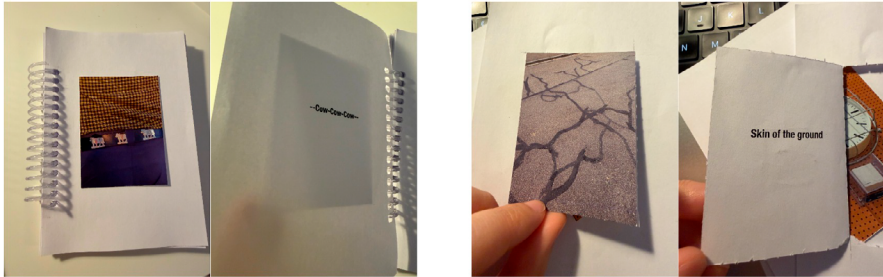

- 1. the introduction to the project
- 2. also an invitation

archive
(From my collection)

I want the audience to make a small act of destruction, but not destroy it completely.

There is a short text on the back to help people understand the image, and the sticker can also be shared and spread by others.

notice/interrupt

There are only a few short words.
At that moment, I want to be invisible.
I don't want to have a name.
I just want to be someone who leaves a reminder.

reflection/continue

website?

More different formats and more concentrated content, but difficult to disseminate.

social media account?

Let more people know; the cost of dissemination is low. the content will be less?

it doesn't have to be linear.

At first, I imagined the project as a journey with a clear sequence: introduction, noticing, interruption, reflection, and continuation.

But the more I worked on it, the less this fixed journey made sense.

These moments could happen in different places, in different orders, or at the same time.

there didn't need to be one correct way through the project.

from a guide to an invitation

Earlier, I was trying to make guides and instructions that could tell people how to notice.

After the workshop, I became less interested in directing people toward a particular experience.

Instead of telling someone what to notice, I wanted to create different ways of entering the project and leave space for them to decide what to follow.

not a fixed journey. an invitation.

too many things i wanted to make.

video already have one

an introduction + an invitation stickers?

take something / share something small interventions?

leave reminders in everyday spaces

zine?

an archive

social media account?

reach more people

website?

more formats / more concentrated content

they weren't wrong. they were just scattered.

I wanted to make many things, and each of them represented a different part of the project.

I didn't want to choose one final outcome and abandon the others.

I needed to find a way for them to exist together.

what could
hold them
together?